A classic way to practice your language skills is by translating passages from one language to another. Take a look at this selection of resources and put your translation skills to work, in both directions. Note: Translation is an art, not a science. There is virtually always more than one way to translate any given word or phrase, so don't worry if your translation doesn't exactly match the one provided: it probably won't. But that doesn't necessarily mean it's wrong – use common sense to recognize synonyms and different ways to explain the same thing.* French to English Translation Practice These free exercises show French passages with the English translation hidden. A preposition (French: les prépositions) is a word such as at, for, with, into or from, which is usually followed by a noun, pronoun or, in English, a word ending in -ing. Prepositions show how people and things relate to the rest of the sentence. How to use the definite article in French: The definite article in French is used in more or less the same way as we use the in English. However, one of the main differences is that in French, there is more than one definite article to choose from. Moreover, all French nouns are either masculine or feminine and, just as in English, they can be either singular or plural. French subjunctive: Expressions of will - orders, advice, desires. Verbs and expressions which express someone's will, an order, a need, a piece of advice, or a desire require the subjunctive. aimer mieux que: to like better / to prefer that commander que: to order that demander que: to ask (someone to do something désirer que: to desire that Practice (English to French translation).
