Known as the greatest warrior that ever existed, the Scorpio profile was born from the Shrai Ryu clan. His death at the hands of a rival assassin has imprisoned him in NetherRealm, his soul in eternal fire. In the sixteenth century, Hanzo Hanzo lived with his wife Harumi, son Satoshi, and his couple's newborn daughter with the Shrai Ryu clan. He turned out to be a mark of Dragon on the forearm, revealing that he was a chosen warrior who competed in a multi-dimensional tournament called Mortal Kombat. One day Hanzo left and while he was taking water, his village was attacked by the members of Bi-Han and Lin Kuei clan. While the killers eliminated Shrai Ryu, Bi-han killed Harumi and Satoshi Rampouch, who had their hardened bodies. When Hanzo returned to the village after hearing Harumi's screams, he created a temporary spear rope with a garden knife and eliminated her killer, Lin Kuei. Faced with a Bi-han, a Bi-han was strangled by Cryomance. Bi-han then mortally wounded Hanzo with his own spear. Before dying, Hanzo heard about his little girl and used his last energies to see her. However, upon arriving at his home, Hanzo gave in to the wounds and disappeared into the flames. Not knowing that both Hanza and Bi-han, Harumi and Satoshi hid their little girl on the floor of their home. Hanz and Blade's daughter later bought Lord Raiden and was placed in the Raiden Temple of Security. Later, when she returned to the "sight", Raiden gave Cole Khanz's Blood Blade and told him to use it, while Khanz's spirit fought him. After the victory over Kabbalah and Milena, now qualifying as an underlift, he appeared with a frozen bracelet and crushed it, sinking Cole into the frozen arena. Cole followed and fought below zero, but sub zero was defeated. Cole used a gangsia blade to bounce back to fight with himself. Hanz's ghost appeared and eventually saved the stake. Now, being Scorpio, Hanz has united with Cole to fight the Under Roman. During the battle, Scorpion uses his ability to save the Cole family. The immortal Ninja Scorpion debut in the original game from 1992 and has since performed in every larger episode of the series (including updates) alongside raids. He identifies himself primarily with the desire to avenge the death of himself, his family and his clan. His main weapon is a kunai cord arrow with which he harps opponent, and his trademark is "Fire Breath", where he exposes himself to reveal his skull, shortly before he crepts his opponent. The background of the figure is portrayed as Hanzo Hasashi (Japanese: 庵) - a warrior from the fictional Shirai Ryu-Clan, which was killed by the older sub-zero (Bi-HAN) from the rival Lin Kuei clan. The following games show that his family and clan were killed by the magician Quan Chi, who became the main goal for revenge. Presented in most games as a neutral party, Scorpion often leaves the main conflicts of the series to pursue his personal missions, which sometimes makes him seize a side that helps him achieve his goal. Scorpion is both a rival and an ally of the younger sub-zero (Kuai Liang). Scorpion has received critical praise and frequent reporting in the media since his debut.He is considered the most iconic fighter in Mortal Kombat: Series co-creator Ed Boon cites Scorpion as his favorite character. Character appearance and history Mortal Kombat (1992) is set to be a series of Mortal Kombat tournaments to determine if the powers of Outworld will allow the Elder Gods to invade and conquer the Earth dimension. The game takes place during the tenth and final tournament organized by the sorcerer Shang Tsung, a changeling servant of the alien emperor Shao Kahn. In the original game, Scorpion is implied to be hostile to Sub-Zero due to the rivalry between their rival warrior clans (the Japanese Scorpion clan is unnamed, while in the game Sub-Zero's Chinese clan is called the "Lin Kuei."). Scorpion's ending reveals that he is actually an undead ghost, a warrior who was killed by Sub-Zero, survived with his wife and child, and was allowed to take his revenge on the physical worlds.

The very ending suggests that the curse of Scorpio's supernatural existence means that he can seek revenge, but cannot reunite with his family that is still alive. According to canon, after human champion Liu Kang wins the Tenth Tournament, Scorpion kills Sub-Zero. After the release of the first Mortal Kombat game, players were able to order a special tie-in comic written and illustrated by MK co-creator John Tobias and published by Midway. The comic gives more information about the tournament's history and characters, although it doesn't quite fit the canon of the franchise's later games.

In a one-page scene, two years after his death, Scorpion attacks Sub-Zero, who recognizes him and is shocked. Scorpion claims that "demons" allowed him to return and avenge his death. Wanting revenge in a fair fight rather than a surprise attack, Scorpion withdraws and promises Sub-Zero that they will meet again in the tournament. It is unclear from later games how much time passes between Scorpion's death and the 10th Mortal Kombat tournament. Mortal Kombat Mythologies: Sub-Zero (1997) shows Sub-Zero joining Mortal Kombat days or weeks after killing Scorpion, but it is unclear if he joins the 10th tournament or if he survived one of the tournaments before that. and later decided to return for the title.[4] Mortal Kombat II (1993, sometime after Tournament 10, the Mortal Kombat Revenge Tournament took place in an outer dimension whereShao Kahn. When Scorio sees a young Podoee saving the life of an opponent, he realizes that he is not a cruel, cold-hearted man who killed him, but the man's younger brother. Scorio decides to be the youngest leader of the underworld to kill his older brother. [5] A younger Podoee and Sub-Zero later receive the birth names Bi-Han and Kuai Liang, respectively, in the rest of the deadly battle. Mortal Kombat II also features the character of an invaluable warrior, Noob Saibot, who is later revealed to be a reborn Bi-Han. The game established the real name scorpion and its clan name, reinforced that the Kuei line is a Chinese clan and its warriors are not considered ninja, and explained the reason for Lin Warriors Koe and Shrai Ryu Warriors wearing similar costumes. According to the game's history, Shrai Ryu was originally founded by Ninja Takeda, who developed Kuei lines before fighting the form and decided to leave the clan. He kept the same basic unitary design of Shrai Ryu, but changed the details and colors. Grandmaster Lin Kuei welcomes this activity. The Sub-Zero takes another Quan Chi mission by purchasing an amulet that is not known to him, Shinnok, the source of power of the fallen oldest God who ruled underground. After raising the amulet Quan Chi goes to prison, but returns a fake shining and keeps a real amulet for himself. Thunder God Raiden later faces a sub-nulus and asks him responsible for granting the strength of Quan Chi to the mortal. To remedy the situation Raiden sends a sub-vezero to prison, where it is again combined with a scorpis that is now the spirit of fire. After winning Hanzo, the Sub-Zero eventually finds and wins Shinok, regains a rogue amulet and brings him to Raiden. He returns to the Lin Kewe fortress and his grandmother informs his clan sub-zero that his other task is to compete in Mortal Kombat as one of several champions fighting with Burvi Shang Tsung. Mortal Kombat 4 (1997) reveals that the non-cromant Quan Chi survived MK mythology: Sub-Zero events. To help Shinnok to attack the worlds, Quan Chi re -releases Scorpio from prison. The necromant offers Scorpio complete resurrection as a living person, forever without underground if he kills the latest sub-he. If a player wins a sub-vzero, Quan Chi reveals that he is personally responsible for the death of the Shirai Ryu clan. In this game, Quan Chi flees from Scorpion and recruits they draming and Moloh to protect him. In conclusion, Scorpio is killed when he throws him into a "soul", a magic hurricane consisting ofbent souls caught between the east and the outside world. [1] The clan and the family of Scorpions are rebelled, but only as immortal creatures. Scorpio in anger tries to deprive the ancient gods of a chance to prevent Armageddon, capturing the power of King's services. He reveals this information to Scorpion and they form his "death alliance". [13] In Mortal Kombat X, two years after the previous matches, Scorpion is still in the service of Quan Chi. The Necromancer also returned the ship to Liang in human form, making him an undead soldier like Scorpion instead of leaving him a cyborg. Raiden and his allies later restored the two full-fledged soldiers, freeing them from the effects of the Necromancer. Over the next two decades, Hanzó restored Rasashi's Shirai Ryu transformation, creating a new clan dedicated to protecting the land, and trained Takeda Takahashi, the son of his ally and colleague Kenshi. When Sub-Zero reveals that Quan Chi's evidence is responsible for the destruction of the Shirai Ryu clan, acknowledging Laundroma's role in the act and their history of dishonesty, Scorpio finally accepts Kuai Liang as an ally. When the Special Forces captured Quan Chi, Hanzo focused on retalking and freed the mage so they could fight. Later, Scorpion Decapita Quace Chi, but not before the Necromancer completed the spell to relieve the fallen elder god.

When the Guardian Chronicle tries to erase Rarity from history, she brings her previous version of Scorpion into the present, hiring her for a job that promises to revive her clan and his family. [15] Meanwhile, the modern-day Hanzo teams up with Sabziro to thwart the cyborg-turned Assassin Kuei Lin, Sektor, and his plans to create a cybernetic Lin Kuei army for Kronika. A: You can look at other franchises like Cyclops, Storm, Jean Grey, Professor X, Magneto and Wolverine will always be in the spotlight. They are. Can you change them? Of course, but why? The X-Men will always have Wolverine and MK will always have Scorpion, and I don't think that's a bad thing. A third ninja tribe, the Reptilians, was added in the third refresh as a non-playable stealth character equipped with green and using Scorpion Lance (minus the gel) as part of his offensive arsenal. It was conceived by Boon as a "cooler version of Scorio". [27] The original costume was made from a Chicago costume shop [26] and was red for filming in the first game, but different yellows were used for Mortal Kombat with a Matéssé vest and knee-high shin guards. Il [28] This led to other male ninja characters crawling out there and sneaking cigarettes and Noob Saibot de Scorpion swapping his palette, the latter two wielding the Scorpion Spear when players used them individually in stealth fights. This move was designed by Pesina, who disliked the original lane move, which was inspired by the ancient Asian weapon, known as cable arrows and resembles Wonder Woman[34]. [35] His other special mission move in the entire series, except for deadly alliance, was a teleport in which he stole the screen during combat, then appeared to shoot the opponent in the back. Scorpion also received a new maneuver for leg loans to MKII, which was not well received (Sega Saturn magazine called it a "nonsense" train that "no one used").
