Beekeeping project proposal in tanzania.

They have been using traditional beehives for four years and applied to Tanzania Development Trust for a grant so that they can buy modern top bar hives and start a tree nursery. To the bee-keepers the new working conditions are much appreciated as previous generations risked their lives for the sweet honey. Kevin Curley met them in April 2015 and was impressed by their enthusiasm and good organisational skills. He will revisit in February 2016. "By improving the methods for bee-keeping, we are also able to improve the living conditions for the citizens," says Ephraim Mmbaga, commissioner in the Liwale area. Win-win model for wildlife and local communities Photo: African People & Wildlife-Felipe Rodriguez More than 1'260 bee-keeping women participate in the project, which also allows them to learn entrepreneurial skills and gain financial independence by selling the honey harvested from the beehives. The Women's Beekeeping Initiative from African People & Wildlife represents a win-win model and approach to conservation that should benefit wildlife and local communities for years to come! IUCN Save Our Species Rapid Action Grant As a part of the same SOS African Wildlife initiative, IUCN Save Our Species has recently launched a Rapid Action Grant to respond to threats linked to the COVID-19 crisis and its consequences, targeting terrestrial or freshwater threatened species in South Africa. Lots of flowering trees will be planted after the rains begin. This project is part of IUCN Save Our Species' African Wildlife initiative, co-funded by the European Union. Under Tanzanian law, trees holding beehives cannot be cut down. The hives have been bought. In this way they hope to increase their incomes so that they can meet the cost of schooling for their children. The local bee-keepers have been trained in a new type of honey production that is not only more efficient but also much safer. Some have been hung in trees and 27 are 'stacked' in a small handa. Better honey for a better life The focus of the development project is for local bee-keepers to have better working conditions and for the production to result in a better quality of honey. Previously, the bee-keepers collected a bouquet of leaves, burned them and climbed the tall trees while attempting to direct the smoke towards the bees. A new development project between the company Unyanyembe, the bilateral development project LIMAS which is funded by the Governments of Finland and Tanzania and NIRAS as the technical consultant is working to better equip Tanzania's local bee-keepers. The bees were chased off, but the smoke was uncontrollable and risked destroying the honey. Kevin writes: We awarded a grant of £1058 to this group in 2015 for the purchase of 50 bee hives and the establishment of a tree nursery. 30 of the 50 are occupied. I will contact the group later this year to find out about the honey harvest and how it compares to their use of traditional hives. READ MORE LIMAS Amount of grant approved (€) : 1058 Year of grant : 2015 Twetegeroze is the name chosen by a group of 22 subsistence farmers in the village of Nyakayanja, about 30 kilometres from Kayanga town in the hills of Karagwe District, close to the Burundi border. The honey revolution Another new aspect is the fact that women are now able to work as bee-keepers on equal footing with the men and thereby provide for themselves. Find out more and how to apply here. In the forest enriched areas of Tanzania, you will no longer meet bee-keepers risking their lives crawling towards the treetops in search for those golden drops of honey. By placing beehives in strategic locations, the project ensures the conservation of the enormous landscape these big cats rely on to survive. In Tanzania, more than 1'350 environmentally-friendly beehives containing more than 50 million bees have been hung from trees in an effort that directly protects the vast landscapes these big cats depend on to thrive. In Tanzania, more than 1'350 environmentally-friendly beehives containing more than 50 million bees have been hung from trees in an effort that directly protects lions, leopards and cheetahs, all classified as vulnerable by the IUCN Red List of Threatened Species. If we succeeded in making it safely to ground again, we would then have to hope that there was not a hungry lion underneath waiting for its lunch," says a bee-keeper from the project. Among others, this means that the bee-keepers have been given suits that protect them from the bee stings as well as modern bee smokers. "If we were to do this like our ancestors did it, we would have to climb the tress while praying not to fall down. "What we are doing is a honey revolution that is benefiting Tanzania as a whole," Mary Jackson, manager in Unyanyembe, explains. I met Emmanuel Magoka (M/kiti) Milton Katesigwa (Katibu) and 7 members. Lions, leopards, and cheetahs — all classified as "Vulnerable" by the IUCN Red List of Threatened Species — face a variety of threats in this region. There has been no honey harvest yet.
