How to write extenuating circumstances letter example

In some instances, a businessperson must be firm and request that a customer or another business cease and desist its actions. For example, if a neighboring business is actively attempting to take business away from you by targeting your existing customers with its sales pitch as they leave your establishment, you might write a letter requesting that the business ceases its activities or you will take legal action against it. A back-off, or cease and desist, letter must be firm and clear to be effective. Type the date, and skip a line space. Type the manager's name, the business's name and the business address on separate lines. Skip another line space. Create the salutation by typing the person's name, followed by a colon. Do not type "Dear" before the name because that will soften the firm tone your letter needs. Tell the recipient to immediately cease the harmful actions. List the actions, with the relevant dates and times, and be specific about what you would like the recipient to stop. The specific details are important in case you need to take the recipient to court later; you will have evidence that you told the recipient to stop its activities. Use clear, matter-of-fact language, and avoid attacking the recipient personally. Explain what you will do if the recipient does not stop its actions. Do not make any threats that you are not willing to follow up on. For example, if you state that you will take the recipient to court, be prepared to do so. Provide your contact information, such as your telephone number or email address. If the recipient contacts you, save the email or write down the details of the call. Keep these communications as evidence in case the matter goes to court. Type "Sincerely" and skip three lines. Print the letter on your company letterhead, and sign your name above your typed name. Mail the letter with signature confirmation so you have evidence that the recipient received your letter. Job seekers looking for an equine management position should design a well-written cover letter that highlights their accomplishments in horse care. Experienced barn managers can cite previously held supervisory positions, while those looking for their first management role can emphasize their horsemanship skills. A cover letter example helps you with the layout of your letter. Examples also show you what elements you need to include in your letter, such as introductions and body paragraphs. Along with helping with your layout, cover letter examples can show you what kind of content you should include in your document and what type of language to use. For example, a sample might show you the action words you should include in your own cover letter. You can use this example to guide you in the creation of your own cover letter if you have previous experience as a barn manager. May 10, 2019 Mr. John SmithCentral Stables123 Paddock Lane SEAtlanta, GA 12345 Dear Mr. Smith, I read in Southern Horse magazine this week that there was an opening for a barn manager at Central Stables, and I am glad to have the opportunity to submit my resume for consideration. I believe that my extensive experience in equine management, primarily gained from employment at major Atlanta equine centers, would allow me to contribute significantly to the Central Stables team. I earned my B.S. degree in Equine Science from the State College program, where I was the captain of the intercollegiate equestrian team. I also worked as a show groom for Olympic equestrian Mitchell Marks each summer, where I was responsible for the care of his string of top show jumpers. After graduation, I was hired as a broodmare manager at ABC Arabians, where I advanced to facility manager status in less than two years. I am currently the equine operations manager for Wellington Warmbloods, where I have worked for seven years. I am currently seeking employment at another Atlanta stable due to the impending relocation of the Wellington operation to Florida this fall. I would appreciate the opportunity to discuss this position with you, and I have included my resume and reference list for your review. Thank you for your consideration. Sincerely, (SIGNATURE)Sarah Sanders555 East Chester LaneRoswell, GA 12345(123) 456-7890sarhsanders@gmail.com You can use this example to guide you in the creation of your own cover letter if you do not have previous experience as a barn manager. May 10, 2019Dr. Mitchell RosssdaleRosssdale Thoroughbreds123 South Dale LaneLexington, KY 12345 Dear Dr. Rosssdale, I saw your job posting on Indeed, and I would like to submit my resume for the barn manager position at Rosssdale Thoroughbreds. While I am a recent graduate, I have gained extensive practical equine experience at internationally respected stables, and I am sure that my horsemanship skills would be an asset to the Rosssdale team. As a student at State College, I earned a bachelor's degree in the field of Animal Science with a concentration in Equine Management. I also worked as a veterinary assistant for equine veterinarian Dr. Mark Wilder during my college years, assisting with a variety of treatments and surgeries. After graduation, I was selected to participate in the Irish National Stud internship, a program that allowed me to work with top Thoroughbred stallions, broodmares, and racehorses. After completing this internship, I was accepted to the highly competitive Darley Flying Start program, which afforded me the opportunity to work with Thoroughbreds in Ireland, England, Australia, Dubai, and the U.S. I would greatly appreciate the opportunity to discuss this position with you in person at your convenience, and I have included my resume and reference list for your review. Thank you for your consideration, and I hope to meet with you soon. Sincerely,(SIGNATURE)Sarah Ann Smith100 North Main Street, Apt. AAnytown, GA 12345(123) 456-7890sarahanmsmith@email.com Consider the following advice when creating your cover letter. Emphasize your qualifications, skills, and certifications: Edit your cover letter to highlight the specific qualifications that you possess that are relevant to the particular position. Highlight any specialized horsemanship skills, completion of well-known internships, or achievement of any industry certifications or licenses. Prior employment at major stables should also be emphasized. If you don't have direct experience with duties mentioned in the job description, show how you have transferable skills from other equine industry employment. Keep it short: Limit your cover letter to a few paragraphs and absolutely no more than one page. Longer letters tend to look cluttered and do not encourage the employer to search for relevant details. Most employers receive dozens of applications for each available position and don't have time for wordiness. Change job-specific details: If you're using one of the example cover letters or a previous cover letter as a template, don't forget to update the addressee information, the date, and important details such as the stable name and where you found the job posting. There are many different styles of writing letters, two of which are the Zaner-Bloser and D'Nealian style. What separates one writing style from the other is slant and shape. Zaner-Bloser is written in a straight fashion in print writing and in a slanted fashion in cursive. On the other hand, D'Nealian style is written in a slanted fashion in both print and cursive. Further, D'Nealian print letters are written with tails, making it easier to transition to cursive. Whether or not D'Nealian handwriting actually helps kids transition to cursive with more ease is still up for debate. Print letters written in the Zaner-Bloser style do not emphasize tails on letters, which gives Zaner-Bloser print and cursive distinct looks. This article provides 5 different printable pages each for the 2 styles of writing. The first 5 are Zaner-Bloser style, the next 5 are D'Nealian style. Your kids can practice tracing and writing letters on these printouts to achieve legible handwriting at an early age. First, print the cover page. You can add the following pages and bind together if you wish to make a booklet. On this page, your kids will write the letters and color in the pictures. On this page, your kids will repeatedly practice writing the letter A. They have many opportunities to trace the letters for guidance. This third page is a bit more challenging. There are less opportunities to trace the letter A. Your kids will now have to practice writing freestyle. Moving beyond letters, your kids will practice writing words that start with the letter A on this page. There are also pictures on this page that they can color in. This page offers your kids a lot of space for creativity. They will write out a sentence, once with the trace patterns and once without, then draw a picture in the space. On this cover page, your kids write the letters in D'Nealian style and color the pictures. On this second page, your kids will practice writing the letter A with the help of tracing patterns. On this third page, your kids will practice writing the letters without tracing. Have your kids practice writing the letter A by writing out words that start with the letter A. There are also pictures to color in. On this last page, have your kids write a sentence that heavily involves the letter A and draw a picture in the space. My daughter loves getting mail. Since she's only 18 months old, that doesn't happen very often. But the journey to the mailbox is still something we do religiously every day, because it brings her so much joy. Truth be told, I still love receiving packages and letters. Not the junk kind, but the real kind, from friends or relatives, just telling me about their days. But it takes effort to correspond this way, especially in today's world of easy electronic communication. Here are some times when it's definitely worthwhile to make that effort. (See also: The Importance of Friendly Letters) 1. Get a Deal Some companies don't publish their coupons, but will send them to you if you request them in writing. It's always good to include a Self-Addressed Stamped Envelope (SASE) when you make your request, too, so it's easier for them. 2. Express Yourself Read a newspaper article that you didn't like? Find an editorial that you could have written better fast asleep? Send the newspaper a letter to let them know what you're thinking. Maybe they'll publish it under "Letters to the Editor!" 3. Make Some Change Tell your Congressman, Assemblywoman, or another politician what you think. While emails and phone calls can work, too, a handwritten letter expressing strong sentiments just might be heard where those aren't. And you might even get a response, too — after all, even Barack Obama hand writes 10 letters to citizens every day! 4. Cause a Ripple Interested in changing something in your community but not sure how to go about it? Crafting a letter that you then deliver to every home and business in your area can be a great way to be heard and to find others who agree with you. 5. Have Some Class Have you ever wanted to feel posh in your communication? Send a letter instead of an email. Bonus points if it's handwritten. 6. Add That Personal Touch Sure, most of what you need to tell people doesn't require a personal letter. But when you want to make sure the recipient of your words knows who you are and that you leave a positive impression, writing a letter instead of sending an email or leaving a voicemail will help you do just that. 7. Get Offline Give your computer the boot for the day (or the week) and send all your communications by mail. Not only is it a blast from the past, but it lets you unplug, too. 8. Send Your Voice Farther Though the Internet and email are used widely around the world, there are still places where they aren't common. If you want to get a message to people in these parts, send a letter. Better yet, get a pen pal and build a relationship. 9. Preserve Memories Even if your kids don't remember what's going on now, they might want to someday. Jotting down little notes for them about events you go to together, special days, and even the things they do that make you smile will help both of you remember what happened and what's important. 10. Remind Yourself of Now Sending a letter to your future self might sound pretty cliché, but it's actually a great way to preserve who you are now, so you can remember later. You may not agree with any of your advice for the future, but you'll be able to hear your own voice, which might be even better. 11. Speak to the Future Time capsules are so 1992, but the truth is that they do preserve aspects of an era that are often forgotten. Make your own time capsule for your children or grandchildren by writing letters to them now that they can read in 15 or 20 years. 12. Say "Thanks" Thank you notes aren't overrated. In fact, they're a great way to reach out and touch people. Let them know that you noticed and appreciated their efforts with a special note saying "thanks!" 13. Encourage a Soldier Whether you agree with the current deployment of troops or not, these folks are risking their lives for the rest of us. Let them know they're remembered by sending them a letter that says so. Letters to Soldiers is a great place to get started. 14. Communicate With the Elderly Email is more and more common among older people, but many of them lose the ability to type and read small print eventually. Writing letters allows them to keep in touch with people who love them, and it means so much when you send them something in return. 15. Ask for Help Customer service being what it is these days, sometimes the best way to get a favorable response is to write a letter. Sure, you have to organize your thoughts and wait for a response, but that's worth it if your situation is dealt with in a way that makes sense to you. 16. Document Your Concerns If you have a longstanding beef with a company or a corporation, one of the best ways to show this is to have an extended correspondence on the issues involved. So write your letters and send them off. Even if you don't get a response, you have ammunition for later. 17. Express Admiration Is there an author you love, a director whose films never fail to move your heart, or someone else you look up to? Let them know the influence they've had on your life with letters. While these may never reach big-name celebrities, they're the best kind of encouragement to most creative people. 18. Offer Encouragement That Lasts Encouraging words can be easily said and just as easily forgotten. Make sure the recipient of yours can't forget them by documenting them in a letter. Who knows? Maybe they'll find it again, years from now, and tackle something they wouldn't have had the courage to do before. 19. Give Sympathy When someone dies, it can be hard to process everything that's going on. Send your sympathy in a letter, so the bereaved can go back and read it anytime. Include memories of the deceased to make the read a special experience. 20. Get That Job With the job market being what it is, anything that will give you an edge is worth doing. After you interview, follow up with a thank you note. Be specific, telling the interviewer what you appreciated about meeting them. 21. Leave a Legacy Write letters to those close to you to be read after your death. This gives you the chance to say all the things that you need to say and gives them a special way to remember you. Even if you're young, having these prepared can give peace of mind. 22. Make a Child's Day Like I said at the start, my daughter loves getting mail. Friends tell me she isn't alone in that. Make a child happy by sending something, even something small, with their name on the envelope. Why do you send letters? Let us know in the comments. Like this article?
